Editor Resources

Taylor & Francis

The screenshot shows the Taylor & Francis Editor Resources page. At the top, it says 'Taylor & Francis Editor Resources'. Below this is a large image of a modern, brightly lit library or study area with bookshelves and tables. A caption below the image reads 'Increasing journal visibility and reputation' and 'Photo by Olaya Morris CC-BY'. To the right of the image is a 'Featured video' section with a video player showing a 'Taylor & Francis SCHOLARLY SUMMIT' logo and a 'Watch and listen...' link. Below the video is a 'Top five articles' section with a circular icon containing the number '792' and a link to 'Read more...'. On the left side of the screenshot is a 'Featured article' section with the title 'Upcoming event - the Taylor & Francis Scholarly Summit, London 2018' by Justin Robinson, Managing Editor, dated May 9, 2018. The article title is 'Fit for the future: the science and art of research communication'. The text of the article states: 'On 28th June 2018, we're hosting a Scholarly Summit in London for our journal editors and society partners based in the UK and Western Europe, all about research communication. Places are limited for this free event, so register now to avoid disappointment. Read more...'

Nominate your journal article for a press campaign

Press Nomination Form

The following form alerts the Taylor & Francis Journals Press & Media team to newsworthy articles which may be suitable for a press campaign.

Please only nominate an article after peer review has been completed, but before the article is published online. If your article is published fast-track, please hold off from submitting the article to production. This is because we only issue press releases for unpublished articles due to the fact they are sent out to journalists under embargo.

Your nomination will be sent to the Press and Media relations team who will get back to you within 7 working days.

Learn more about what makes research newsworthy, the benefits of PR for researchers and what a press release can achieve.
